How to lose weight and keep it off!

Dr. Art Ulene, spokesperson for the campaign

Helpful Hints for Long Term Success

Following a well balanced diet that is particularly suited to your needs will help you take weight off comfortably and safely. But it's just as important to keep the weight off long-term. To help you, here are some ideas that have helped other people to succeed in weight loss.

1. Do not skip meals. Eating three meals every day will keep you from experiencing the ravenous hunger pangs that can spoil even the best of weight loss plans. Start with a good breakfast, eat a well balanced lunch, and finish with a dinner that doesn't leave you feeling overstuffed. Are snacks important to you? Choose fresh fruit or vegetables. Most contain fewer calories for their large volume than do other types of snacks such as cookies, cakes, or nuts.
2. Relax before you start eating. Before you take your first bite, take a few deep, slow breaths to calm your mind and body.
3. Eat slowly. Chew each bite of food for at least 20 seconds, and allow at least 30 seconds after you have finished chewing before you put another bite in your mouth. Using this technique, you are likely to feel full with much less food consumed.
4. Actively enjoy your food. Savor the aromas. Focus choose foods that are low in fat. Use non-fat dairy products. Bake and broil instead of frying. Try lemon juice or vinegar and herbs on your salads instead of oily dressings. These simple steps will significantly decrease the number of calories in your diet without giving up anything in the taste department.

5. Make physical activity a regular part of your daily life. You will burn up additional calories if you are active. Studies show that people who include exercise in their weight loss program are much more likely to keep off the lost pounds long term if they continue to exercise.

6. Do not weigh yourself more than once a week. Weighing too often can be very discouraging, and it does not give you an accurate picture of your real progress.

7. Do not confuse your worth as a person with your weight on the scale. While weight loss can be

The American Society of Business and Behavioral Sciences (ASBBS) was founded in 1994 as an interdisciplinary professional organization. The mission of ASBBS is to provide a forum for exchange of ideas among faculty members in Business and Behavioral science disciplines. ASBBS fulfills this mission through holding annual meetings, publishing the edited Proceedings of the meetings and publishing the following refereed journals:

- Journal of Business and Behavioral Sciences
- Journal of Business and Accounting
- Journal of Business and Educational Leadership
- ASBBS eJournal

The annual national meetings of ASBBS are usually held in Las Vegas in the month of February. The annual international meetings are held in the summer mostly in

About the Publisher

The Alliance for Children and Families is a nonprofit membership association representing nonprofit child- and family-serving and economic empowerment organizations in the United States and Canada.

The more than 370 member organizations of the Alliance provide an array of community-based programs and services to all generations, annually serving close to 3.4 million people in more than 6,000 communities.

Together, they have a combined operating budget of $4.1 billion, employ more than 53,000 full-time staff, and enjoy the volunteerism of more than 7,500 board members. Motivated by a vision of a healthy society and strong communities, the Alliance works to strengthen America's nonprofit sector and, through advocacy, assure its continued independence.

Member agencies are the first priority of the Alliance; as such, a clear understanding of members' needs and expectations drives all processes, practices, and policies. The Alliance plays a significant national role to assure the strength and independence of our private, nonprofit members, and we are committed to this sector and act as our members' national radar to keep them apprised of important trends and issues.

2008 Magazine Demographics

Circulation: Our distribution is to about 14,500 individuals. Projected readership is approximately 42,000. Most readers (around 12,000) are volunteers who serve on the boards of directors or trustees at Alliance and United Neighborhood Centers of America (UNCA) member agencies.

These are the decision-makers, those who control billions of dollars in spending each year.

Our roughly 550 Alliance and UNCA members have a cumulative operating budget of $5 billion. They serve tens of thousands of communities and millions of clients annually. The top managers and leaders at these organizations—as well as the thousands of corporate and community leaders who serve on their boards—make and influence billions of dollars in purchases every year.

That's a lot of influence. And impact.

Areas of purchasing interest might include financial and banking, accounting, legal, consulting services, books, workshops/seminars and training, web development and design services, food services, vehicles, insurance, technology solutions, education and training, and human resources support.

And you can reach them directly through the Alliance for Children & Families Magazine.

Magazine Profile

The Alliance for Children & Families Magazine is a quarterly publication targeted to a specialized national audience that includes senior management and leadership of nonprofit social service organizations, as well as volunteer board members, child and family advocates, and key elected officials throughout the nation who impact the future of children and families.

Packaged within the bounds of the magazine is the Nonprofit Director, a publication specific to the interests of the more than 12,000 individuals who volunteer on the board of directors at Alliance and UNCA member organizations. The Nonprofit Director champions knowledge development, networking, and information sharing within this unique and growing community of nonprofit volunteer leaders.

Between the Alliance for Children & Families Magazine and the Nonprofit Director, editorial content touches on a wide range of nonprofit leadership and governance issues, including this sampling of topics:

- Civic engagement
- Board governance and development
- Leadership development and training
- Innovative programs and services
- Public policy and advocacy
- Fund development
- Communications and marketing
- Member highlights and member profiles
- Nonprofit human service sector issues

Poliomyelitis: The role of the military in the final campaign

Military Medicine, Oct 2000 by Pearn, John

It is estimated that the global eradication of smallpox has saved the world $1.4 billion (U.S.) annually. This saving and the removal of one of the most tragic scourges of death and chronic morbidity is a prize of inestimable value. The success of the poliomyelitis campaign will depend, in no small part, on the continued preventative health roles of the health services of the armed forces of many nations.

The American Journal of Epidemiology is the premier epidemiological journal devoted to the publication of empirical research findings, opinion pieces and methodological developments in the field of epidemiological research. It is aimed at both fellow epidemiologists and those who use epidemiological data, including public health workers and clinicians.

Field Studies in Hookworm Control

Reference has been made above to two or three studies that have been extremely fruitful in practical results. In this field 1921 has been the most productive year in the history of the Board. Colonel Sir Clayton Lane, with a small subvention, has been seeking to improve the technique of stool examination. Beta-naphthol has been given a further test as an anthelmintic on an extensive scale and under field conditions by Mhaskar and Kendrick in India. Ascaridol has been administered on a relatively small scale and with good results by Smillie in Brazil, Mhaskar²

Promoting Tourism As U.S. Foreign Aid: Building On The Promise Of The Caribbean Basin Initiative Robertico R. Croes, Patrick L. Schmidt

Abstract

Many economists are questioning the role of foreign aid as a development tool. The Caribbean region has received significant amounts of foreign aid but with mixed results. The region confronts daunting development issues, such as declining productivity and employment against the backdrop of a challenging international environment with a high risk of natural disasters. The study argues that tourism is a stable source of growth for the region and has great potential as a mechanism for distributing foreign aid in a market driven approach that may avoid several of the shortcomings of traditional foreign aid. The Caribbean Basin Initiative includes fiscal incentives for U.S. citizens to travel to certain Caribbean countries for the purpose of strengthening their economies and should serve as a model for further study and innovation. This study assesses whether tourism can serve as an approach to delivering U.S. aid to the Caribbean. Full Article

Importance of Core Courses in Students' Satisfaction

Nicola J. LoCascio, Chris A. Barker, Robert Bickell Sr.

Abstract

The Biological Sciences Department at Marshall University was finding it difficult to offer the required courses for Biology majors as each curriculum stated. In addition, it was unclear if the course offerings truly represented the best training for the specialized majors. As a starting point for evaluating the curriculum we chose to measure current student satisfaction with introductory courses, preparation for upper-level courses and course offerings. Student satisfaction with their academic agenda has been linked to program strengths, and an assessment was undertaken to identify effective (and ineffective) areas of the curriculum as perceived by students. In particular, was the inclusion of defined core classes, currently set at three, giving students the necessary skills for their upper-level courses, and were there courses within the curriculum that contributed to success following graduation? A survey questionnaire was developed and administered to students in eleven biological science courses. These courses spanned the biology curriculum and included the participation of freshman, sophomore, junior, senior, and graduate students. A selected complement of controls embedded within the administered assessment tool, determined that being enrolled in all three core courses was the only variable that was statistically significant and a positive impact on the students' perceptions of the quality of their scientific education. An outcome of this study revealed that completing, or currently being enrolled in, all three designated core courses resulted in students rating the quality of their scientific education significantly higher than students who have not taken all core courses. These findings were at the beginning of a restructuring of the Biological Sciences curriculum.

Promoting Tourism As U.S. Foreign Aid: Building On The Promise Of The Caribbean Basin Initiative

Dr. Robertico R. Croes, University of Central Florida, rcroes@mail.ucf.edu

Abstract

Many economists are questioning the role of foreign aid as a development tool. The Caribbean region has received significant amounts of foreign aid but with mixed results. The region confronts daunting development issues, such as declining productivity and employment against the backdrop of a challenging international environment with a high risk of natural disasters. The study argues that tourism is a stable source of growth for the region and has great potential as a mechanism for distributing foreign aid in a market driven approach that may avoid several of the shortcomings of traditional foreign aid. The Caribbean Basin Initiative includes fiscal incentives for U.S. citizens to travel to certain Caribbean countries for the purpose of strengthening their economies and should serve as a model for further study and innovation. This study assesses whether tourism can serve as an approach to delivering U.S. aid to the Caribbean.

Introduction

In recent years, there has been a tremendous focus – from governments, NGOs and individual activists – on the need for providing greater foreign aid to poor countries (Birdsall, Rodrik & Subramaniam 2005). In June of 2005, for example, there was a call from many activist groups at Live 8 concerts around the world to “make Journal Description: Epidemiology and Infection publishes original reports and reviews on all aspects of infection in humans and animals. Particular emphasis is given to the epidemiology, prevention and control of infectious diseases. The field covered is broad and includes the zoonoses, tropical infections, food hygiene, vaccine studies, statistics and the clinical, social and public-health aspects of infectious disease. Papers covering microbiology and immunology which have an epidemiological relevance are part of this broad field. Papers come from medical and veterinary scientists worldwide. It has become the key periodical in which to find the latest reports on recently discovered infections and new technology. For those concerned with policy and planning for the control of infections, the papers on mathematical modeling of epidemics caused by historical, current and emergent infections, will be of particular value.

Single vs. Multiple Records

- E-version not described; "noted"
- Many libraries implemented, then abandoned
- Made use of record sets difficult
- How to handle when print ceases...?
- Easier interpretation for patrons
- Preferred by reference staff

A photograph of three young boys sitting on a large mound of reddish-brown dirt. They are viewed from behind, looking out over a vast, open landscape. The boy on the left wears a green and white plaid shirt. The boy in the middle wears a light blue long-sleeved shirt, blue jeans, and a white cowboy hat. The boy on the right wears a blue and white plaid shirt and blue jeans. The landscape beyond them is filled with green shrubs and trees, with rolling hills and mountains in the distance under a clear blue sky.

Dirt—fun in its place!
